Mitt abroad

New York Post editorial, 31 July 2012

...Maybe what the media resent is the contrast Romney's trip makes all too clear: that, unlike Obama, he understands that the world consists of good actors and bad, that some nations deserve America's unwavering friendship — and some don't. That some will have America's back when it truly matters — and some won't. And that the difference matters...

Impolite, but Right

Perhaps Mitt Romney was unwise to wonder aloud about the organization of the London Olympics. But the facts on the ground bear out his judgment:

Hosts cave to Lebanese demand for makeshift barrier to separate their athletes from Israel's...

Empty seats cause a stir...

Embarrassing: Military recruited to fill mass empty seats at Olympics... Tickets sent to foreign dignitaries end up on black market...

Parents of athletes turned away in tix mixup...

Ticket backlash overshadows Games...

Social media blamed for poor data transmission... Interference from thousands of tweets and IMs...

Flame snuffed as cauldron moved inside—where only ticketholders can see...

And those appalling opening ceremonies:

Why capitalism has an image problem

by Charles Murray, 28 July 2012

...What happened to turn the mood of the country so far from our historic celebration of economic success? Two important changes in objective conditions have contributed to this change in mood. One is the rise of collusive capitalism. Part of that phenomenon involves crony capitalism, whereby the people on top take care of each other at shareholder expense (search on "golden parachutes"). But the problem of crony capitalism is trivial compared with the collusion engendered by government...

Here we go again. In our outrage over the Aurora massacre, we slip back into our habit of trying to make sense of the senseless, to trace a chain of causation back to its source, and eliminate that source so it will never happen again. by Hope Hodge, 16 July 2012

The U.N. Law of the Sea Convention has yet to get a committee vote, but Senate Republicans have gathered enough opposition to ensure it will be dead on arrival. The office of Sen. Jim DeMint (R-S.C.) announced Monday that 34 senators now oppose the treaty, ensuring that getting a two-thirds majority vote—67 ayes in the full Senate—will be impossible...

Obama Administration partially surrenders in Florida voting dispute

by Hans A. von Spakovsky, 16 July 2012

The dispute between the State of Florida and Eric Holder's Justice Department took an interesting turn this weekend: DOJ finally agreed to give Florida access to federal databases as part of the state's effort to verify citizenship of registered voters. This is a complete reversal. DOJ's prior refusal to provide such information had led Florida to file a federal lawsuit in Washington against the administration in June....

The Trickle-Down Hoax

by Richard Butrick, 15 July 2012

... The trickle-down trope promotes an image of money flow that is back-asswards. Money invested in business enterprises goes first to employees, contractors, and suppliers. If the enterprise is successful, then the profits trickle up to owners and stock holders (or in the case of Gates, et al., gushers up). However, in the absence of a profit motive, which is reduced in the aggregate by a raise in marginal tax rates in the upper tiers, this activity does not occur...

The No. 33, and the surprisingly bipartisan art of repeal by Mary Katharine Ham, 11 July 2012

Today marks the 33rd vote the Republican-led Congress has taken to repeal all or part of ObamaCare. Many media outlets are using the stat du jour as sort of de facto proof of repeal's futility. Look at these silly, extremist Republicans, tilting at government-subsidized windmills 33 times! ...

The truth: <http://hotair.com/archives/2012/07/11/the-no-33-and-the-surprisingly-bipartisan-art-of-repeal/>

This is the full text, as delivered. It includes my transcription of the section toward the middle, where the crowd boos Mr. Romney's promise to repeal ObamaCare, and he departs from his prepared remarks to explain why its repeal would benefit everyone.

What did Tim know?

by Charles Gasparino, 12 July 2012

...If the right questions get asked, the American people will get a firsthand account not just about how much our government knew about the Libor mess, but also of the cozy, corrosive relationship between the nation's big banks and the bureaucrats who are supposed to regulate them. Long before President Obama tapped him for Treasury, Geithner was one of those bureaucrats...

Textbook case of inefficiency

Can't buy a quality education.

by Michael Graham, 11 July 2012

Dateline America, 2012: College Students Complain "We're Taken For Granite," Face A "Doggy-Dog World." Those expressions were actually used in papers submitted to freshman comp professor James Courter. Other students wrote they found the college experience "homedrum" or had trouble getting into "the proper frame of mime."...
