indirectly to Obama, since Ms. Abedin is the top aide to his Secretary of State. Barack Obama has plenty of his own unsavory ties, including a possible connection to the Brotherhood through his Israel-hating personal friend Rashid Khalidi.

Go and see a great movie

Don John, 25 Aug 2012

In 2004 we had Team America: World Police, and in 2008 there was An American Carol; both fine conservative movies. But this year there's something really special, and today I finally got to see it. 2016: Obama's America is a documentary film in which Dinesh D'Souza (President of King's College in New York City) discovers President Obama's intellectual, political, and emotional roots by interviewing a number of people in Kenya, Hawaii, and mainland America who knew Obama's father, his mother, his African relatives, his white grandparents, or his boyhood mentor Frank Marshall Davis. There's a revealing interview with the president's Kenyan half-brother George Obama; several of his father's Kenyan contemporaries; a number of clips of Rev. Jeremiah Wright (both preaching fiercely and talking calmly); analysis from scholars like Shelby Steele and Paul Kengor; and even a trip to Indonesia.

The camera techniques and visual editing are beautiful and clever: they keep the film moving and they avoid clichés. The content of the summation sequence near the end is stunning.

I've been a fan of Dinesh D'Souza's for 20 years, ever since I read a lengthy article he wrote for The Atlantic—back in the days when it was slightly right of center, as opposed to the left-wing rag it has become in recent years. Even so, I was skeptical that he could show an Obama-student like me very much that I didn't already know. Boy, was I wrong.

Read more about it, watch trailers, and find the nearest theatre where it's playing: <http://www.2016themovie.com/>

Regionalism: spreading the fiscal irresponsibility

by Wendell Cox, 24 Aug 2012

...Smart growth, from our research, also is associated with higher housing prices, a lower standard of living, greater traffic congestion and health threats from more intense local air pollution...

...Both of these strategies are aimed at transferring tax funding from suburban local governments to larger core area governments...

...Any suggestion that local suburban jurisdictions are subsidized by core local governments simply reveals a basic unfamiliarity with US municipal finance...

Break the chains, says Joe

by Christopher Chantrill, 22 Aug 2012

... Let's see if I get this right. After the liberals screwed the working class by shoving them into unionized "good jobs at good wages" that priced themselves out of the market by the end of the 1970s, after liberals shoved blacks into the liberal affirmative action plantation that has now failed from general corruption and the law of unintended consequences, and after liberals shoved blacks into "affordable" housing that crashed around their ears, now we are supposed to pull the liberals' chestnuts out the fire for them, with our money? Forget it, pal, because there is. No. More. Money. Anyway, before we start compromising, what about all the other little darlings of the liberal welfare state?...

Now there is no way that a rational person can continue believing that Islam is "the religion of peace." It is more intolerant and misogynistic than any other belief system ever invented. In fact, it is pure evil; its adherents are enemies of humanity, and they should be eradicated. Sucking up to these devils was the defining moment of Obama's oh-so-sophisticated foreign policy. Liberals should have realized that there are a lot worse rulers than Hosni Mubarak: he was better for America, better for Israel, and far better for the people of Egypt than the animals who have seized power.

Nigel Farage makes the Euro-socialists listen to the truth

He's the head of the U.K. Independence Party (UKIP), and a member of the European Parliament. Here are clips of three inspiring speeches he delivered on the Euro crisis, especially with regard to Greece, Spain, and the unaccountable know-it-all bureaucrats who dictate to the people of Europe. They ask him to apologize for his bluntness, and he's no more inclined to apologize than Margaret Thatcher ever was.

The Comeback Team

by Roger Kimball, 11 Aug 2012

I've been saying for some time now that Romney will beat Obama by a landslide. His choice of Wisconsin Congressman Paul Ryan as a running mate makes me even more confident that Romney will trounce Mr. Hope 'n Change. Ryan is an adult. Unlike Joe Biden, he does not regularly give the impression of having suffered a lobotomy. Ryan, unlike the entire Democratic establishment, understands that money does not come from the stork. He understands that individual liberty and limited government go together, and, what's more, he is in favor of individual liberty, which the Democratic establishment certainly is not...

The Postmodern President

Wall Street Journal editorial, 10 Aug 2012

President Obama spent his formative years in academia, so he's no doubt familiar with postmodernism, the literary theory that rejects objective reality and insists instead that everything is a matter of interpretation and relative "truth." At any rate he's running the first postmodern Presidential campaign, now organized almost exclusively around allegations about his opponent that bear no relation to the observable universe...

Romney's excellent trip

by Charles Krauthammer, 2 Aug 2012

...Scorecard? Romney's trip was a major substantive success: one gaffe (Britain), two triumphs (Israel and Poland) and a fine demonstration of foreign-policy fluency and command — wrapped, however, in a media narrative of surpassing triviality.
