Can the British Conservative party be critical of Islam?

by Paul Austin Murphy, 20 July 2013

http://www.americanthinker.com/2013/07/can_the_british_conservative_party_be_critical_of_islam.html

This column gives rise to interesting questions. Could a moderate Labour politician criticize Islam—just as Richard Nixon, and not a liberal Democrat, was able to establish relations with Communist China? Or might it simply be better to support the UK Independence Party and the English Defence League?

She's with her lover Satan now.

The Public-Sector Money-go-Round

Don John, 12 July 2013

There is a very big difference between public sector and private sector unions.

Many public-sector unions and their political cronies have been robbing the public blind for years, and guys like Harry Reid and Dick Durbin want to keep on enabling them.

Here's how it works. Elected officials are the "employer." They negotiate contracts with the public-sector unions, and pay them with money that comes from you and me, via taxation. Then those same public-sector unions give generous contributions to any and all politicians who've been generous to them. Next time they negotiate a contract---Presto! Another sweet deal, quid pro quo. In some cases, this cycle has continued for decades with little interruption.

Private-sector companies use their own money---not the taxpayers' money---to pay their employees. And the employees don't bribe them with contributions. They just work hard and (if they're organized) negotiate hard. Big difference.

As a renowned U.S. president once said, "All government employees should realize that the process of collective bargaining, as usually understood, cannot be transplanted into the public service. It has its distinct and insurmountable limitations when applied to public-personnel management. The very nature and purposes of government make it impossible for administrative officials to represent fully or to bind the employer in mutual discussions with government-employee organizations. The employer is the whole people."

And what president could that have been? Reagan? Coolidge? Eisenhower? Nope. That famous right-winger Franklin Delano Roosevelt!
