Millennials are causing the U.S. divorce rate to plummet

by Ben Steverman, 25 Sept 2018

<https://www.bloombergquint.com/pursuits/2018/09/25/millennials-are-causing-the-u-s-divorce-rate-to-plummet#gs.13tIToo>

Mr. Steverman concludes his story by saying "Fewer divorces, therefore, aren't only bad news for matrimonial lawyers but a sign of America's widening chasm of inequality. Marriage is becoming a more durable, but far more exclusive, institution."

What an absurd, anti-social notion! He utterly rejects the concept that people have some responsibility for the choices they make. In Mr. Steverman's world, people — especially "poorer and less educated" people — are simply swept along through life, utterly unable to make a wise choice or two that might make things a little better, perhaps even a lot better. So, for instance, a person who abuses drugs or alcohol is entitled to suffer no ill effects from his foolish choices.

The clear implication is that "It's society's fault." The Monty Python guys, decades ago, said "Right, we'll arrest Society then." Around that same time, Margaret Thatcher put it even better: "There is no such thing as Society. There are individual men and women, and there are families. And no government can do anything except through people, and people must look to themselves first."
